Stories of Washington and for Washingtonians Featured in the Sunday Edition of

The Washington Herald

THE WASHINGTON HERALD next Sunday will contain an extraordinarily large number of stories of local color. Among them will be a pen picture of the city by a visitor who believes that the magnificent plans, past and present, for beautifying the Nation's Capital are making excellent progress, and in his mind's eye he sees a vista such as ancient Rome or modern Paris never presented.

Another article of special interest will be the description of newspaper methods and the machinery for news-gathering at the White House, Capitol, and in the departments. Washington, with two exceptions-New York and London-is the greatest news-assembling and distributing point in the world. The correspondents in this city are, in general, of the highest type of newspaper man. A topic of interest to Washingtonians is Miss Mabel Boardman and her Red Cross work. This society girl is devoting a large part of her life to this most comprehensive charity, in partnership with the Federal government. The article will not only prove of interest to philanthropists, but to all who feel the heart-beats of humanity.

There will appear an installment of The Optimist, along with the names of the winners of the prizes in the competition of this week; and likewise a further discussion of the plans for the Optimist Club.

Presidential recommendations to Congress, and everybody knows what that means, and a discussion of a $100,000 President, and the whys and wherefores thereof, will also be of pertinent interest to Washingtonians. The regular features, including a real estate section for the dealer and the investor, a sporting page, with the redoubtable "Bill Bailey" as its most conspicuous feature; a society page, unsurpassed by any, will all be found up to the high standard of previous Sundays.

Articles of a general nature worthy of attention are the following: "Give us the ballot"—the battle cry of the suffragettes.

What will London do with her horde of paupers? Loss of the Republic recalls other sea tragedies. Amazing revelations of Pittsburg graft one of the most startling and dramatic chapters of municipal corruption in
